Known for his staged photographs that invite ambiguous interpretations of such themes as love, lust, and the everyday, in his film and video works Nic Nicosia continues to explore the psychological uneasiness that often accompanies the middle-class American values of the Dallas suburbs where he grew up and lives today. On view at the museum will be four of Nicosia's recent works: MiddleTown (1997), Moving Picture (1998), MiddleTown Mourning (1999), and Cerchi e Quadrati (2000).

Primarily concerned with tracing history, Tomoko Yoneda's images from her series Between Visible and Invisible are poetic illustrations of some of the major intellectual figures of the twentieth century. In her photographs, key objects that helped shape the work of scholars such as Sigmund Freud and Hermann Hesse are viewed through the scholars' actual eyeglasses.

Maria, 1994

digitized chromogenic development print
90 x 40 inches
Recent acquisition

The large-format photographs Maria and George, by the collaboration team Aziz + Osiyer, present hermetically sealed faces. Disturbingly identical, their subjects are portrayed by an eerie melding of identity and technology, undermining the familiar genre of photographic portraiture.

Heike Baranowsky

video installation

German artist Heike Baranowsky's video Parallax consists of two moving images of a woodland passing by, one with the images slightly delayed. The silent, hypnotic piece is a compelling exploration of time, movement, and landscape.

Michael Spano is well known for emphasizing unixed spatiality by using unconventionnal angles in his street photography. The images from his series Gypsies (1996-2000), made with a hand-held 4x5 camera, fuse two distinct moments on one negative.
